JOLLY OUTING

Hayrides Fail To Plummet In Popularity

The "old-fashioned" hayride is still fashionable.

Even if the hayrack is losing out in the workaday world there is no sign that it will ever lose its social utility. During a long portion of Utah's first hundred years its standing as a vehicle of pleasure was unchallenged. Of recent times it survived the competition of speed and comfort.

Some changes have been made. The young folk in this Centennial photo submitted by Carl Nyman, National, Carbon county, dressed up in their party best for a hayride years ago at Lehi. Now a hayride party invitation usually suggests back to the farm clothing.

But a hayride always was a jolly, jerking, bouncing, jolting and rolling good time, the hay having the function of overstuffed upholstery in reducing bumps and bruises.

Other generations of gay blades might have had some misgivings about choosing for pleasure the same old wagon they may have worked on from sunrise to sunset six days a week but the "postman's holiday" principle seems to have prevailed and some accounts say "even the horses had fun."
